FURTHER CUT MADE IN PAYROLL OF REDS

RELEASE OF HEMSLEY TO BROWNS ON WAIVERS ECONOMY MOVE

Trainer Also Let Out in Definite Program to Relieve Overhead; Change in Officials Expected In Fall

CINCINNATI, O.—More than two weeks will elapse before Cincinnati's Reds again play at home and the fans here are beginning to wonder what the club's percentage will be and also what the make-up of the outfit will be when the team's last Eastern trip is finished. The release, August 12, of Catcher Rollie Hemsley to the St. Louis Browns, reported to have been for the waiver price, and the addition of Catcher Jack Crouch to the Red squad to replace Hemsley, merely continued the economic reconstruction of the Reds which started some time ago. Crouch is a much cheaper man than Hemsley.

Business has been so light with the Red team this year that Sidney Weil and other officers of the club simply couldn't maintain the payroll, and one by one, Taylor Douthit, Jack Quinn, Andy High, Bob Smith and Hemsley have departed, while Cecil Hill, trainer, who was added to the roster to help keep the players physically fit, also has been dropped.

Crouch comes to the Reds with a good record at Milwaukee in 1932 behind him and he may be as serviceable as was Hemsley this season. Whenever Ernie Lombardi physically is able to catch, the big Italian will be the team's backstop, although recently, when both Lombardi and Hemsley were disabled, Clyde Manion caught four games in two days so ably that some of the fans freely expressed the opinion that maybe the team would have done better this year if Manion had been used more often.

Lombardi got back into action at St. Louis last week, after being out with a sore side since July 21 and, although he held up his end, the Reds lost the series with the Cardinals and closed their season with that club on the short end of the count.

Not Expecting Too Much.

After losing this series at St. Louis, the Reds returned to Cincinnati to loaf for 24 hours before heading for New York the afternoon of August 15 to make their last swing around the Eastern end of the loop.

They face the necessity of winning 12 of the 18 games they are to play in New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn and Boston on this trip to achieve an even break on the season for their 44 games on Eastern soil, but mighty few fans here expect them to come back with a record of that kind.

On their first Eastern trip this year the Reds won six games, lost four and tied one. On their second Eastern jaunt, they won only four games while losing 12. Starting August 16, they are to play three games at New York, five at Philadelphia, six at Brooklyn and four at Boston to conclude their Eastern schedule for the year.

And after that there may be some interesting developments regarding the business management of the team, although we hear on supposedly good authority that if a change is made in the front office personnel, it won't come until after the season has closed.

That affairs of the Reds are at a pretty low ebb is a well-known fact to practically anyone who takes any interest in big league baseball. But it's not the first time this club has been down in the ruck so deep that rumors of a change in ownership and transfer of the franchise to some other city were to be heard in all directions.

The start of the greatest stretch of prosperity the Cincinnati club ever has enjoyed came right after one of these black periods. Following the "work or fight" edict, which cut the season of 1918 short, the Cincinnati club's treasury was empty. With the approach of winter, came the end of the World War and Garry Herrmann, getting ready to launch the season of 1919, found it necessary to reorganize the team's operating company to raise sufficient funds for financing a training trip.

Investors Profit from Reorganization.

Pat Moran was engaged as manager to replace Christy Mathewson because the latter, then overseas, failed to answer any of the numerous messages sent him asking if he would return to lead the Reds. Much of the stock in the new operating company was sold at considerably below par, because the men who showed a willingness to buy it would not pay par value.

The Reds had a dismal training trip that spring, but opened the league season with seven straight victories, won the pennant and World's Series and started a wave of baseball prosperity for Cincinnati which extended through the season of 1927.

Except for one sixth-place team, the Reds were not out of the first division from 1918 through 1926, inclusive, and it may be that the club's artistic and financial slump which started after it just missed winning the pennant in 1926 now has run its course and that next year will see the dawn of a new era of prosperity.

Talk of moving the franchise out of Cincinnati is, of course, silly and is not being indulged in by any National League officials or officers of any clubs in the league. Cincinnati is the equal of any city in the country as a baseball center with the right kind of a team and is far better than any town to which the franchise could be moved. No other city would support a losing team any better than Cincinnati has done the last few years. This town may need new capital in the club and new players on the team, but it's too good a spot for the league to desert.

SCOUTS TRAIL NEWARK BEARS

Chicago Cubs Said to Be Ready to Bid for Weaver and Jablonowski.

NEWARK, N. J.—Fans here, satisfied that the Newark Bears will finish as far in the lead as they did last season, are beginning to speculate on what members of the club will go to the majors at the end of the season. Liberal allowance is made for the players the Yankees will take, but it is understood several other major clubs are ready to bid for some of those who will not be called in.

Scout Jack Doyle of the Chicago Cubs and Scout Patsy O'Rourke of the Phillies have been trailing the Bears for some time. The former, it is said, is interested in Pitcher Jim Weaver, the man mountain from Kentucky, who has hurled 20 victories. Doyle also likes Pete Jablonowski, another member of the hurling department, and is sweet on Shortstop Red Rolfe. There is no possibility, however, of Rolph, the best shortstop in the International League, getting away from the Yankee organization. Weaver has done remarkable hurling this season and is a greatly improved pitcher. Doyle thinks he will fit in nicely with the Cubs. He also thinks Jablonowski is ready for another shot in the big time. Whether the Cubs will bid for the two hurlers, Doyle would not say. O'Rourke is also sphinx-like, but there are several members of the Bears he believes would do well in the uniform of the Phillies.

Outfielders Myrll Hoag, Johnny Watwood and Vince Barton, along with Infielders Johnny Neun and Marvin Olson, are subject to the draft. It is not likely that either of the latter two will be plucked, but there is a strong possibility some club might put in a claim for one of the three fly chasers. Pitchers Weaver and Jablonowski are also draft subjects, but due to their great work, it is believed they will go by the sale route.

The Bears are now making their last Northern trip of the season. While in those parts last year, the Bruins clinched the flag and it is expected they will do the same thing this time. ROBERT TREAT.

For Strike-Out King

A HANDSOME trophy, emblematic of his achievement in establishing a modern major league strike-out record of 17, was presented by Edgar G. Brands, editor of The Sporting News, to Dizzy Dean, star pitcher of the St. Louis Cardinals, at Sportsman's Park, St. Louis, Mo., August 13. The trophy was the gift of Frank Ruppenthal, head of the Minit-Rub Corporation.

The trophy, shown above, has the figure of a pitcher in action between the pillars of "Baseball's Hall of Fame" and bears the inscription: "Holder of World's Major League Strike-Out Record, St. Louis Cardinals vs. Chicago Cubs, July 30, 1933. Struck out 17 Chicago Cubs."

LEAVES FROM A FAN'S SCRAPBOOK

WILLIAM EDWARD (WILLIE) KAMM

Third baseman Cleveland club of American League. Born, February 2, 1900, San Francisco, Cal. Height, five feet ten and one-half inches. Weight, 170 pounds. Bats and throws right-handed. Not married. Lives with parents, 1455 Twenty-first avenue, San Francisco, during off season.

Willie Kamm

HERE'S concentrated class. Willie Kamm may not be the man in the latest "hit of the week" song, but, for more than ten years he has been one of the really great third-sackers of majors. Fans sometimes have overlooked him because he lacks flair for sensational. Never a grandstander—just a sound, every-day baseball workman, smart, conscientious and aggressive in own manner.

Kamm holds more records as defensive player than any other third sacker in history of American League. Led league in fielding hot corner six straight seasons—1924-1929, inclusive. Holds high mark for fielding percentage for his position—.978—made in 1926. Had only 11 errors that year. Repeated for same percentage in 1929. Holds A. L. mark for put-outs at third base—243—made in 1928.

Kamm is a product of San Francisco diamonds. Parents, Edward and Frieda Kamm, both were born in Germany. Willie says German pronunciation of name is "Komm." Was called that when he went to school, first at Emerson Primary and later at Hamilton Intermediate. He played ball with kids at both schools, but likes best to go back to days put in with Anson (Billy) Orr at Golden Gate Park. Orr, an enthusiastic developer of kid teams for years, has given many big leaguers their first schooling, playing on his teams.

Orr, in days past, always had two or three kid clubs under his command. They ranged from "Midgets" in name to "Federals." When boys got too old for one outfit, they graduated to higher team, if they possessed enough class. Willie broke in with Orr's Federals and later joined "Park Bums." This is inelegant name, but such players as Joe Cronin, Lew Fonseca, Mark Koenig and many others left Park Bums to make good in league ball.

Kamm played shortstop and did some pitching with Bums, who were made up of youngsters intending to make career of game. Played on diamonds of Golden Gate Park whenever there was quorum for two teams. Usually chose sides and battled for pot made up of quarters or half dollars chipped in by players of each side. Hot games resulted.

In mid-season, 1918, joined Sacramento club of Pacific Coast League for trial. Played in two games and league broke up, owing to war. Was only 18 years old then. Went to St. Helens, Ore., and played with McCormick Shipyards team. After two months, returned to San Francisco and got job as timekeeper for Union Iron Works, which was also building ships. Kept tab on 700 men and played with Timekeeper team representing plant.

Short time later, Tom Laird, sports writer with San Francisco News, asked Kamm if he would consider contract with San Francisco Seals for 1919. Willie said he would. Charley Graham told youngster he would be the third baseman for Seals, but Willie thought this was come-on. Jumped into training with Seals, but suffered ptomaine attack and was underweight. Started season at third. Failed to make much of impression and fans and press began demanding club get real third baseman. Karl Crandall was brought in out of condition and Kamm thought he saw himself going out.

Health improved and Crandall, failing to do much, was taken out and Willie got another chance. Figured in 136 games that year, but batted only .235. Was regular all the way in 1920 and continued to improve. In 1922, batted .342, stole 35 bases, hit 20 home runs and was sold to Chicago White Sox for reputed sum of $100,000.

Kamm snickers over that now. Late in 1917, when Willie was only 17, Spike Hennessey, old semi-pro pitcher, who saw possibilities in youngster, recommended him to Danny Long, Coast scout for White Sox. Long sent Hennessey contract to get Willie's signature. But it was blank, with no figures, and youngster thought somebody was kidding and refused to sign. Hennessey later joined Sacramento as trainer and it was through him youngster got ill-fated first job with Sacs.

Willie remained with Sox from 1923 to May 17, 1931, when he was traded to Cleveland for Lew Fonseca. While not heavy hitter, has always been effective in work at plate. Best season with stick, 1928, with Sox, when he reached .308, only time to exceed .300 in major service. Has lifetime average of .281 up to this year.

Easy-going, quiet type athlete. Does not go in for rough stuff. Never has been put out of major game by umpire. Once was bounced by Bill Byron in Coast league years ago and claims to this day Singing Bill got wrong man.

Willie has solid, sharp features, dark brown eyes and sparse black hair.

P. S.—There is a bald spot up there under the button of his cap.

EXHIBITION GAMES

Game of Monday Night, August 14.

AT ST. JOSEPH.—In a thrilling pitchers' battle, witnessed by 3,500 fans, three of the outstanding, right-handed pitchers of the Western League defeated St. Joseph, 2 to 1. The All-Star Western League team, selected from seven clubs of the league, played fine ball behind the pitching of Mays Copeland, Springfield; Joe Berry, Joplin, and Sad Sam Dalley of Omaha to gain a hard-fought victory. It was strictly a pitchers' duel, with the hitters of both teams being held in submission. A wild throw by Catcher Brucker of St. Joseph enabled Catchings to score from first base on an attempted steal for one of the Stars' runs. The other run was scored by Willbanks, who singled in the third inning. St. Joe's run was scored by Buckshot Mays, third Seraph pitcher, who tripled in the eighth inning and scored on Harrell's hard single to center. Mays was the victim of the two-run attack in the third inning which enabled the All-Stars to win the Western League's Battle of the Century. Dalley was the victim of the Saints' one run in the eighth inning. Score:

ON THE AIR LINES

SOME players are frank, if nothing else, when interviewed over the air. Jim Bottomley, Cincinnati first baseman, was asked, August 11, by Bob Thomas, announcer for KWK, St. Louis, Mo., how he liked married life. "Well, I've only been married six months, but it is great," said Sunny Jim, who declared that when his baseball days were over he'd like to retire to the Ozarks and spend his time hunting and fishing.

Wally Roettger, in the same interview, gave it as his opinion that center field was the easiest outer garden to play, although from some of the murmuring in the background, it was evident that several of his Cincinnati teammates did not agree with him. Wally explained that a ball hit to center field was likely to travel more truly, while in going to other fields it took freak twists.

Chick Hafey, another Red outfielder, declared that the low liner was the toughest chance to handle and voiced the prediction that the New York Giants would win the National League pennant. Sparky Adams, Cincinnati third baseman, said the cognomen was tacked on him by Rabbit Maranville, because he originally was called "Rabbit" and Maranville insisted there was only one rabbit in the game.

Pepper Martin declared that he had no compunctions about accepting scratch hits as they made up for those he lost through sensational catches. Ernie Orsatti, with whom fishing and hunting is an avocation, invited suggestions as to where he could find good fishing spots.

The White Sox Boosters' club of Station WJJD, Chicago, who gave Johnny O'Hara, the station's baseball announcer, a diamond ring on a special day for the broadcaster last spring, are working up a Ted Lyons' Day for August 26. Pat Kelly, president of the Boosters' club, is making up a book to contain the names of all those who donate—not over ten cents—to a fund for a present for the White Sox pitcher, and it is hoped to interest thousands of WJJD listeners in the presentation.

Station KASA, Elk City, Okla., has a 15-minute sport broadcast at 6:15 o'clock each evening and through the announcing of J. E. Mayhew has built up a large following in Western Oklahoma and the Panhandle of Texas. He gives the scores of the day and many features, including those furnished by The Sporting News.

Lee George, sports announcer of KGBX, Springfield, Mo., was recently on the shelf for a week due to an operation on his nose. He calls his baseball broadcasts "Diamond Flashes" and The Sporting News features are now sent out over the air at 6:45 o'clock on Wednesday and Saturday evenings.

BILL KLEM, veteran umpire of the National League, broke the silence of the arbiters on the air, by consenting to an interview over Station KMOX, St. Louis, the evening of August 13, and the next day he was razzed about the broadcast in the double-header between St. Louis and the Cincinnati Reds.
